

Abstract

The invention concerns a device for carrying out medical interventions on the human or animal body as well as a method for generating an image of the human or animal body.

According to the invention, first image data obtained pre-operatively are updated by means of second image data obtained intraoperatively, in particular, updated corresponding to the changes between two second image data recorded at different points in time.

1989-04-24 10:00:00